

A MIDWEST CONNECTIONS PICK!

“Very few historical novels I have come across since I first read the manuscript of Larry McMurry’s Lonesome Dove have impressed and pleased me more than Jack Todd’s Sun Going Down . . .

Jack Todd has offered further proof that the big Western novel is at once a living part of our national literature and as much a part of popular fiction as ever.”

—Michael Korda, author of Ulysses S. Grant and Ike

“A big, old-fashioned, historical saga teeming with memorably depicted men and women and packed with incident. Sun Going Down is as rich and exciting and larger than life as the American West it so vividly brings alive.”

—Lewis De Soto, author of A Blade of Grass

“Sun Going Down travels far beyond the Western genre. It is a beautifully written link with human ancestry that will resonate with all who treasure reading. Once begun, the pages do not stop turning.”

—Michael Blake, author of Dances With Wolves and The Holy Road

“This is an impressive, grand work that wants to sit next to Lonesome Dove.”
