

MIDWEST CONNECTIONS

Nothing More Dangerous

by Allen Eskens

"Nothing More Dangerous buzzes along with the tempo of a boyhood story that almost tells itself. . . . The story is gripping and yet reassuring as the boys' friendship deepens. Their summer adventures exploring the woods take on a 'Stand By Me' quality with Stephen King-like dread around every bend."

Catfishing on CatNet

by Naomi Kritzer

"The characters offer positive, realistic LGBTQIA+ representation—especially nonbinary identities and characters still exploring their identities. Refreshingly, the characters also feel like generally-woke-but-still-imperfect humans. Wickedly funny and thrilling in turns; perfect for readers coming-of-age online."

My Mighty Journey

by John Coy

Illustrated by Gaylord Schanilec

"The scope of time is apparent from the first words of this impressive book, which traces a waterfall on the Mississippi River from the robust days of the woolly mammoth to its more restrained incarnation today: 'For those who came before, those now, and those to come.'"

What Color is Night?

by Grant Snider

"If you think the night is black, think again. Snider's elegant nocturnal idyll explores the many colors visible to those who 'look closer.' [What Color is Night?] will have young readers hoping to stay up for a glimpse of 'colors unseen.'"
